News Release

(for immediate publication)

July 18, 2011

dlp imaging corp. (dlpic), the Long Island, NY based North American distributor of CST, Krefeld, Germany is pleased to announce that their partner, CST USA has added an additional field engineer to their technical support staff.

Adam Carson joined the CST group of companies in the early part of 2011 and successfully passed the CST technician certification process after a rigorous training phase with the German supplier of direct-to-screen imaging technologies that include digital light, DLE, inkjet and waxjet engraving in filmless screen making.

Toni Sims, president of CST USA, is very pleased with the addition of this staff member: "Adam's 14 years of in-depth production, sales and managerial experiences in the engraving industries of Europe and North America perfectly compliments the technology support of our customer base in the USA, Canada and Mexico." Mr. Carson will actively participate in the after sales service of the complete range of CST equipment. In addition to his technical expertise, his background and communication skills will be much appreciated during training and CST technology implementations by dlpic's numerous customers.

CST USA and dlpic provide a dual technical support structure for CST's direct screen imaging systems. dlpic maintains a comprehensive spare parts inventory on Long Island and is responsible for coordinating and assisting in equipment installations. The main responsibility of CST USA focuses on providing training, instructions, maintenance and system component trouble shooting. Hans J. Grein, Vice President of engineering and services of dlpic explains: "Increasing placements of CST machinery in North America and the newly improved CST imaging technology required adding technical manpower to maintain our impeccable service response our customers became accustomed to over the years."
